A LINE LEVELS OUT

The Bureau of Labor Statistics had some good news for the American people the other day. It reported that its consumers price index halted its steady rise on September 15. On that date it stood exactly where it was on August 15, when the index reached 175.5 per cent of the 1935-39 level.

That is high. It is 6.5 points higher than the reading for September 15, 1947, and 30.9 points higher than that of June, 1946. But the significant fact is that the index did not continue to rise as it had been doing for the preceding five months. When a doctor is fighting a fever he is encouraged to see the line on the chart level out.

It is, of course, too early to conclude that inflation has reached its peak and that the price index will now turn downward. The bureau reported that the .6 per cent decline in food prices between August 15 and September 5 was offset by increases in residential rents and prices of house furnishings, fuel, electricity and refrigeration, and miscellaneous goods and services.

Food prices have fallen further since September 15. They may go lower still. But if other prices keep on pushing upward, the time will come when the index will start mounting again.

If food prices get down to a more reasonable plateau, and other prices do not mount too far, the pressure for a fourth round of wage increases may not be so great that it will blow the lid off again.

WE NEED TO BE TOLD

The full brainpower of America's fabulous and frenetic advertising empire is about to be turned loose on another product—the American system of economy. Strangely, the "audience group" will not be the Russians or the Europeans. It's us, the American public!

Purpose of the campaign, as announced by the Advertising Council, is to teach Americans the economics of this country. In other words, tell 'em why we are what we are today.

This will be no one-shot affair. Advertisements will run for at least a year in newspapers and magazines, radio, billboards, etc. It will probably be one of the most challenging assignments advertising, as a unit, ever tackled.

Those in charge of the campaign will use all the tricks and the hard won knowledge that have successfully sold soap, cigarettes, motor cars and the 101 other products. Never before, in our knowledge, have spokesmen from all classes gotten together to back a single economic credo.

Navy is perfecting a rocket which is effective if it only comes close to the target. Duck hunters would welcome the idea applied to a shotgun.

Cochroaches have been on earth nearly 3,000,000,000 years, science announces. No wonder they know how to get around so well.

Informs of International Seminar Set Up In Finland

LANGHORNE, Nov. 6 — With Thursday observed by Langhorne Sorosis members as International Relations day, Mrs. Hilbert Waldenkogel presented as the speaker Mrs. Loraine Cleveland, of George School, Newtown.

Mrs. Cleveland, who has been in Finland for the past year working for the American Friends Service Committee, told of the organization Finland is endeavoring to set up to solve problems of the day. An international seminar has been organized, sponsored by political parties, labor organizations, and government ministries of Finland, she informed.

The main subject to be considered centers around causes and nature of conflicts and their solution. An effort is being made to try to get together a group of people from all countries possible in Europe, with representatives of Finland's political parties also included. The group will consider the problems of conflict from both the Christian and Marxist approaches, and try to learn how obstacles can be overcome.

The speaker told of some of these meetings which she has attended. She spoke of the type of people in Finland and their reaction to different problems and to news from abroad. "The people of Finland I consider, have the best ability of any race."

In a Personal Way . . .

Plaintiff Rests Case In Strike Court Battle

The streamline head across the International's publication of "PPP" was explained as meaning "Perfectly Paralyzed Plant," but the witness said he could not explain.

The purpose of putting the picket line at the plant was to advertise the strike. We never stopped anyone from crossing the picket line.

Attorney Beechwood for the plaintiff company called as a witness John Baker, Sr., father of Jay Baker, president of Local 500. Baker said that he and his son Ralph circulated the petition which it is said was signed by 140 workers expressing a desire to return to work.

Defense attorney attacked the credibility of the petition and said that those who signed the petition had been promised an increase of five cents per hour and a further increase of a like amount later on.

Two Divorces Are Granted by Court

Judge Keller, informed the Court that by voluntary agreement with his wife he was paying $16 a week for the support of their two children.

Charles E. Moreland, 17 South 44th street, Philadelphia, who was brought in on an attachment, and is $1590 in arrears on a support order of $25 a week for two children, was released from prison and directed to start making payments.

Mrs. Edna Moreland, Downey Drive, Lacey Park, who said they lived in 43 places in 22 years, testified her husband, a radio engineer, had lost his job with the Federal Commissions Customs in Philadelphia because he drank too much.

"I advise you to take the AA treatment and stop this drinking and get back on your feet," Judge Keller said.

Alleged Suicide Is Formerly of Bensalem

Edwin S. Barth, 52, whom police stated ended his life at his Philadelphia home because he was despondent over losing his spiritual following, is a former resident of Bensalem township. Arrangements for funeral of Barth are in charge of J. Maurice Tomlinson, funeral director.

Barth was found dead in bed at his home at 1 a. m. yesterday, covers pulled over him and his arms folded across his chest. Police are awaiting analysis of pills and capsules found in two boxes at his bedside. In a note left by Barth, were a number of Biblical quotations. He is said to have stated in the note that he had been despondent since his conviction in January of practicing physiotherapy without a license. He added that he was leaving this world but would "return as a spirit." He asked that no minister officiate at his funeral.

Barth, an electrician employed at the naval base in Phila., pleaded guilty to a mis-practice charge last January. It is stated. At that time he removed his religious center from Kensington avenue to his Emerald street home, calling it "The Raymond Church." His following fell away and he decided to abandon the church.

Discovery of Barth's body was made by Mrs. Ethel Brown, of B. street, Phila., who had served as organist at his meetings. Mrs. Brown had been asked by Barth to keep his dog and a puppy while he attended to duties which arose, he said, due to a death in his family. Thursday evening he returned to Mrs. Brown's home and said he would be back shortly for the animals. When he failed to arrive by one o'clock, Mrs. Brown told police she decided to go to Barth's home as the dogs were racing through her house and she felt they would arouse neighbors.

MODEL FARM

GALENA, ILL. — (CNS) — A retired farmer combined a lot of spare time with a 90-year-old horse-drawn hearse and ended up with a wooden model farm. William Fox, tired of looking at the hearse, carved a model two-story farm house, with all the other necessities for a farm including a hired man. Then he put the electric-lit display in the hearse.

The Election

The feeling of the farmers and the apathy toward the state and local Republican tickets was not a sudden election morning development. Those forces were there all the time. They were taken into account. After they were considered, impartial observers thought Gov. Dewey would easily over-ride them and even the organization working for President Truman did not consider them sufficient.

The question that needs answer is what undercurrent existed that escaped the eyes and ears that are trained to catch undercurrents.

We will venture that one answer—but it is only a part answer—is that the organizing power of the labor unions was vastly underestimated. In contrast there was no similar organization in normally Republican territory outside the cities, and what organization there was did not work very hard for a variety of reasons. The principal one is possibly over-confidence and another one is that very few of the workers had any assurance of a stake in a Republican victory.

But we say again that those conditions were present before the election and that they went almost totally unnoticed and hardly misjudged where they were noticed.

The conditions mentioned are not causes, we think. They are the results of some deeper cause. If the sweep that was predicted for Gov. Dewey had been in the cards, all the good organization on one side and the lack of organization on the other might have deflected tiny rivulets but they would not have stemmed the main current.

That current was certainly under way in 1946. It appeared irresistible as late as last summer. That it should have been reversed in so short a period is at this writing inexplicable and that it should have been reversed with almost no one sensing the reversal is more inexplicable.

Without asserting that they are the answer, or an approach to it for that matter, we offer two suggestions.

During Mr. Truman's regime the country has been prosperous and particularly the rank and file of the people have been prosperous. Under those circumstances the administration in power always has an advantage.

The other suggestion goes to the type of campaign that Gov. Dewey made.

It was not a fighting campaign. It drew few issues between Gov. Dewey and his opponent. It embraced certain ideas and policies which a great many Republicans did not like and to which they could not bring enthusiastic support. The election figures are incomplete but so far as they go it seems that Gov. Dewey did not do much work than he was expected to do in the usually Democratic strongholds and in some cases he did better. But he fell far below expectations in many places that were supposed to be Republican strongholds.

President Truman made the kind of a campaign to which the American voters are accustomed. He slugged at his opponent. He told what he intended to do and he identified the interest and emotions of the voters with his program. Gov. Dewey did none of those things and it is apparent that the independent vote and probably some usually Republican votes were alienated; this was something strange to them and when it came to the decision they preferred not to take a chance on something strange.

Would it have been different if Mr. Dewey had dwelt on Mr. Truman's frailties and his background? If instead of taking a vague promise to the farm belt, he had gone there with a specific program? If he had taken up the cudgels for what a Republican Congress had done instead of seeming almost to accept the criticisms of it?

Those questions are raised by way of suggestion because, of course, no one can furnish an answer to them.

We only know what was done and we know that the voters did not respond and warm up to a man whose campaign appeared to be synthesized out of vaguely outlined policies described in generalities. The result was to create a mystery and out of the mystery grew distrust.

Until the causes of the election upset are more fully understood, there will not be a full understanding of its meaning.

If the American people, acting quite consciously and with a deep-running determination, have voted into office an administration with leftist policy, dominated by organized labor, they have made a decision which will change the social and political fabric that we know. We are headed for something like the experience of Great Britain.

One may doubt that the voters have consciously chosen that course. They may have been guided by considerations personal and emotional and have yielded to these considerations because none pictured the ultimate result of yielding.

But in the latter case they still have presented the question and the Republican party has one of two choices: To take a position unequivocally opposing the controlled and regimented state; either that or to pass from existence.

Four times it has tried to take a half-way position. Four times it has been beaten—and it did not require Mr. Roosevelt to do it the fourth time.

It may be the decision has been made. Or it may be that the stage has been set for decision. In either case the decision is as great as that involving union or secession.
